INSTITUTE OF ARTS AND HUMANITIES

UC Faculty Podcasting Institute - December 13-17, 2021

Call for Applications

Deadline: November 1, 2021

The Institute of Arts and Humanities will provide two scholarships for Academic Senate faculty with primary appointments in the Division of Arts and Humanities to attend the UC Faculty Podcasting Institute run by the San Diego State University Digital Humanities Librarian.

Podcasting has become ubiquitous and you may wonder “does the world really need another podcast?” And yet, they continue to offer an accessible format for expert voices to engage non-specialist audiences with our subject areas, connect scholarship to what is happening in our world, and participate in intellectual communities. The UC Faculty Podcasting Institute will provide hands-on training for UC arts and humanities faculty to translate research, commentary, and community-sourced narratives into podcast episodes. Working in cross-disciplinary and intra-university teams, participants will learn how to express ideas in storyboard form, create and collect audio content, and edit their narrative into an entertaining, powerful podcast.

During the five-day virtual institute, participants will work with a group of UC faculty colleagues to create a podcast episode on a topic of shared interest. The skills learned through this practicum can then be applied to creating your own podcast series. All equipment will be purchased and sent to attendees for use during the week. Attendees will be able to keep the equipment after the completion of the Institute. Technical support will be given throughout the week. Participants should plan to attend Monday through Friday, 9 am to 5 pm (with breaks).
